ASHBOURNE SHOW 2021

Why you must complete a risk assessment form - If someone comes on to your stand and injures themselves they can look to seek compensation from you. If you've made no effort to complete a risk assessment or have simply put 'NO RISK' across your form, a court would likely look at this as you not having made any effort to consider the welfare of people coming onto your stand. If however, you have completed a risk assessment and even if the injury is as a result of a hazard not identified in the assessment, a court maybe much more likely to look favourably on you as you've shown you've considered the risks and taken steps to minimise them.

Where work will include erection and removal of structures, the risk assessment must include details of, how you will ensure no unauthorised access to your working area, if height is involved suitable access and prevention of falls and details of any PPE required.

A hazard is anything within reason which could cause damage to people, property or the environment. Marquees and gazebos of any size, banners or flag poles must be fit for purpose and secure. Hazards could include access, slips, trips, falls from height, manual handling, use of electrical equipment, weather, or items on display.

A risk assessment is an important step in protection of your workers and your business as well as complying with the law. The Health & Safety Executive produce a useful guide to assist you in completing risk assessments should you require it.
